Angle Relationships

When two angles form a relationship where their sum is equal to 180° , we say they are supplementary. If the angle is less than 90° , then it is acute. If the angle is greater than 90° , then it is obtuse.

Supplementary angles always appear on the same side of the transversal line because they are formed by the same transversal line and the same two lines.

Example 1:

- a. Find the supplement of each angle.
- b. If these angles were to form a right angle, what would be the measure of each angle?
- c. Find the exterior angle.

ANSWER:

Vertical Angles

Vertical angles are opposite of one angle.

- b. If one angle measures 120° ,

d. Identify which angles are vertical angles, but not linear. This is true if you know the measure of one angle for the other angle's measure.

- a. 120°
- b. 60°
