But since a reference to all relevant circumstances is "very important" to the majority's concern with racial inequalities, does it mean that the majority is "concerned" with racial inequalities? The answer is "no." The majority is concerned with the fact that there are inequalities in the distribution of wealth, but it is not concerned with the fact that there are inequalities in the distribution of wealth among different racial groups. The majority is concerned with the fact that there are inequalities in the distribution of wealth, but it is not concerned with the fact that there are inequalities in the distribution of wealth among different racial groups.
