INTRODUCTION

Emotional and behavioural disorders are common in childhood and adolescence. The special features of children's psychiatric problems are that the disturbance in the child may result from problems in other members of the family, especially the parents. Another aspect is whether the behaviour, which is considered abnormal, is related to the child's stage of development. There are many types of disorders, which have many common symptoms. Since the child depends a great deal on the family, especially on the mother for a stable, secure family environment which facilitates emotional bond, acceptance and consistent discipline, a lack in any of these aspects may predispose the child to emotional and conduct disorders. While assessment of the problems in childhood is basically carried out by interviewing the parents, often one finds a checklist helpful to make a clear-cut diagnosis as pointed out by Holland and Kendall (1980), Burgess (1990) and Schmidt et al. (1985). The most common assessment strategy is the self-report questionnaire, which are designed to represent dysfunction in different areas of behaviour. Higher scores on such questionnaires indicate that the individual endorses more items reflecting the type of cognition and behaviour the scale measured. Higher levels of endorsement correlate with measures of psychopathology. The literature in this regard is filled with Construct specific scales and their relation to certain types of psychopathology (Linscott & DiGiuseppe, 1988). Several behaviour problem checklists in which parents are asked to rate their child's behaviours have been developed and extensively studied. For example, one such checklist is "Child

Practitioner's Guide to Empirically Based Measures of School Behavior Mary Lou Kelley,David Reitman,George H. Noell,2006-05-02

Children's display of unacceptable behavior in the school setting, school violence, academic underachievement, and school failure represent a cluster of problems that touches all aspects of society. Children with learning and behavior problems are much more likely to be unemployed, exhibit significant emotional and behavior disorders in adulthood, as well as become incarcerated. For example, by adolescence, children with Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder are more likely to be retained, a grade drop-out of school, have contact with the law, or fair worse along a number of dimensions than their unaffected siblings. Barkley (1998) Identification, assessment, and treatment of children with externalizing behavior problems and learning disabilities is critical to optimizing development and prevention of relatively tractable behavioral and emotional problems in adulthood. For example, poor interpersonal problem solving and social skills, excesses and deficits are strongly associated with poor outcomes in adolescence and adulthood. The school is where children learn essential academic, social, and impulse control skills that allow them to function effectively in later years. School is where problems in these areas can be most easily identified and addressed. The purpose of this book is to provide an overview of assessment practices for evaluating children's externalizing behavior problems exhibited in the school environment. Reviews of approximately 100 assessment devices for measuring children's externalizing problems are included. Instruments include structured interviews, rating scales, and observational methods.

Handbook of Behavior Therapy in Education S.N. Elliott, F. Gresham, J.C. Witt, 2013-11-11

What do we know about behavioral analysis and intervention in educational settings? Given that educational institutions were among the first to embrace the new technology of behavior change in the late 1950s and early 1960s, it is apparent that we have had the opportunity to learn a great deal. The evolution of the field of behavior therapy has witnessed a change in the behavior therapist from an adolescent fascination with repeatedly demonstrating the effectiveness of the new technology to a mature recognition of the complex implications of the behavioral paradigm for individuals, systems, and society. Many facts now taken for granted were considered impossibilities a mere two decades ago. In her 1986 presidential address to Division 25 of the American Psychological Association, Beth Sulzer-Azaroff reviewed a number of changes in attitude in education that were strongly influenced by behavior therapy. Most educators now agree that (a) everyone can learn, (b) complex skills can be taught, (c) precise general and durable performance can be taught, and (d) barriers to learning can be overcome. In addition, we would add that behavior therapy is being applied to increasingly more complex human problems, such as social skill deficits, internalizing disorders, and dysfunctional systems and organizations.

Infancy to Early Childhood Robert N. Emde, John K. Hewitt, 2001-04-19

Behavioral genetics is a fast-growing multidisciplinary field which attempts to explain the influence of genetic and environmental factors on behavior through the lifespan. The preferred investigative technique for teasing out the differences between genetics and the environment is the longitudinal twin study. This book is the first complete publication from the MacArthur Longitudinal Twin Study (MALTS) that is by far the most ambitious and comprehensive longitudinal twin study to date. The goal of such an in-depth study was not to merely provide thorough descriptions of developmental change between the ages of one and three years but to offer an original theoretical framework that explains how change occurs in different domains and how genetics and the environment influence those changes This rigorous study will set the agenda for developmental psychology and behavioral genetics for decades to come

Hoge,2012-12-06 This book provides a discussion of advances in our understanding of the juvenile offender These derive from psychological and criminological theory and research on the phenomenon of youth crime and from efforts on the part of social science researchers and practitioners to develop and evaluate new approaches to prevention and treatment The theoretical and empirical advances relate first to analyses of the nature and extent of youth crime. This is reflected for example in various descriptive and classification systems developed for characterizing juvenile offenders. Significant advances are also being made in understanding the risk factors associated with youthful criminal activity as well as the processes linking the risk factors with antisocial behaviors. This understanding is based on theory and research relating to the correlates and causes of delinquency. The advances in our understanding of the nature, correlates and causes of juvenile crime are accompanied by progress in analyzing the treatment of youth in juvenile justice systems and in developing and evaluating alternative approaches to treatment. These efforts include research on decision making within juvenile justice systems and the development of screening and assessment tools. This also includes efforts to develop and evaluate effective prevention and treatment programs for use with youths involved in criminal activity and those at risk for this activity.
