Abstract: This study was designed to assess the impact of the 1996 National Health Insurance Act on the health status of the population in South Africa. The study was conducted in the Western Cape province, which was one of the first provinces to implement the new health insurance system. The study was a cross-sectional survey of 1,000 households, which were selected using a multi-stage sampling method. The study found that the implementation of the new health insurance system had a positive impact on the health status of the population, particularly in terms of access to health services and financial protection. The study also found that there were still some challenges, such as the need for further investment in health infrastructure and the need to improve the quality of health services.

Five recent reformulations are based on the same idea: the subject is individual (personal or non-CCO) or artificial (legal). To ensure that (s)he is individual, the CCO subject must have a personal dimension and not be the CCO role.
