

INTRODUCTION TO EQUILIBRIUM - WORKSHEET

1. Sketch the following systems:

- closed system
+ Exemplify by describing how an ice cube that has melted
- dynamic equilibrium
+ Exemplify by describing how a "closed" system where a substance is in equal flows
- dynamic equilibrium
+ Sketch an object that spontaneously coming to rest upon its own internal resistance

2. Give an example of three types of equilibrium systems:

- statically equilibrium: a ball with equal static pressure and opposing reaction example e.g. ball on a flat top, a cliff edge
- process equilibrium: liquid water and vapour (example e.g. H₂O(l) <-> H₂O(g))

3. a. Consider a closed flask filled partly with water. Suppose after time liquid vapour system is considered an example of a system in equilibrium and write the equilibrium equation.

This is an example of an equilibrium because it is a closed system.
H₂O(l) <-> H₂O(g)

b. Consider a closed flask containing a substance in contact with a porous liquid crystal at the bottom of the flask. Explain why the crystalline system is considered an example of a system in equilibrium and write the equilibrium equation.

This an example of an equilibrium because it is a closed system, and substances change like and opposing amounts (i.e. that amount of liquid on the crystalline substance appears to remain the same).
Crystalline and liquid states are still happening, the substance is just not in the end state.

4. Some systems appear to be in equilibrium, but really they are not. Differentiate systems that are considered as "statically stable" systems. Static systems are systems equilibria where input of energy automatically is equal to the output of energy automatically. For example: think of a battery that automatically recharges. Parts are always moving and products are always being replenished. There is no external input of particles.

Identify the following as equilibrium systems (YES), static stable (SSS) systems, or neither:

- decomposition of water as hydrogen and oxygen YES
- chemical reactions in a closed flask of gases that pressure is constant YES
- the water level of Lake Ontario remains constant SSS
- hydrocarbons flowing in the underground SSS
- the equilibrium of a chemical and thermally, liquid water like a
