British Committee Proposes to Build Steve Jobs' iPad-Equipped Classroom

Friday March 23, 2012 10:23 am PST by Jordan Jones

In his biography of Steve Jobs, Walter Isaacson shared a story of Jobs meeting with U.S. President Barack Obama. Along with sharing his disapproval of the difficulty in building a library in the United States, he also dismantled America's education system.
“It was absurd, he added that American classrooms were still based on teachers standing at a board and using textbooks. All books, learning materials, and assessments should be digital and interactive, tailored to each student and providing feedback in real time.”
Jobs wanted to hire great textbook writers to create digital versions, and make them a feature of the iPad. He wanted to make textbooks free and bundled with the iPad, and believed such a system would give students the opportunity to learn properly.
