

a system continuously conditioned inside the house. By analyzing the heat and mass flows, we learn what heat transfer (and all the other things) the house is a heat engine does. A thermodynamic analysis will tell us the conditions needed to maintain the temperature and relative humidity, and that analysis will tell us the size of the fan required to push the air in, the conditioner and the duct needed to distribute the cooled air throughout.

Perhaps we want to focus on the air conditioner itself. Figure 1.2 is a schematic of two heat exchangers, a compressor, and a valve in series. A thermodynamic analysis would tell us how much energy goes into a second stream of cooling. A heat transfer analysis would tell us the heat exchangers. The fluid dynamics analysis would tell us the cooling the compressor does for, as well as the needed compressor flow.

It is a simple task, consider a cooling system with a compressor (Figure 1.3). The compressor flow and power supply must be selected so that the building of the system is not compressed. This cooling system approach is to have air through the compressor into the room, and then the air is cooled by the compressor. The compressor will also cool the air in the room, and the air will be cooled by the compressor. The compressor will also cool the air in the room, and the air will be cooled by the compressor. The compressor will also cool the air in the room, and the air will be cooled by the compressor.

1.2 THERMAL AND FLUID SYSTEMS ANALYSIS AND ENGINEERING

Advanced descriptions, similar to those given in the previous section, can be given of large industrial systems (e.g., power plants, oil refineries, chemical processing plants) and related processes (e.g., heat treatment of metals). Heat propagation that would otherwise have thermodynamic, heat transfer, and fluid dynamics are all needed in many design studies. It is the integrated use of these three disciplines that is required for rational and complete analysis of many systems.

Whether the objective is given an assignment to design a new device or modification to existing process or to predict the performance of a device, the objective of the design process must be very clear. Subsequent, which aspect of the device, process, or system in which to focus must be well defined. A systematic approach to the design analysis is needed. Figure 1.4 shows a flow diagram of the design process. The design process is a series of steps and engineering a design from a concept. We always begin with the physical system (e.g., the design of a machine that is needed). The engineer's job is, first, to describe the physical system into a physical model and, second, to describe the physical model with a mathematical model. The actual physical system may be so complex that it is impossible to fully describe each part within process. However, we require that there be a model, a picture, or picture that we can describe and represent in depth by the system sufficiently so that it can be modeled. Once a physical model is developed, then physical laws that govern the process (e.g., a force, momentum, mass, or energy balance) are used to create the
