Head Lines Poems And Passages:

Head Lines John Yurechko, 2014-11-12 Head Lines Poems and Passages is a collection of poems that were written to be read out loud either alone or with one another or in a group. They chronicle the life and experiences of author John Yurechko. They are written in a style and format that lends itself to reading out loud with line breaks BIG VOICES in ALL CAPITALS and whispers in italics pauses rushes vocalizations etc. These visual guides are as much a part of the writing as the words themselves. Head Lines is a collection of the author's writings spanning fifty years. He reflects on topics ranging from his childhood in a steel town to life in California Virginia and North Carolina and to everyday events that he describes in these poems and passages. Raking Leaves Then to the Master's own backyard there are rake hands on the Rovers of Mars to scrape deep into all the sustaining planets. And rakes in Voyager's arms sweeping up the swirling mess of the galaxies raking time and space so the heavens will look gloriously orderly and ready for pickup on The Last Trash Day. With this work we reverse the billions of autumns raise up all the droppings and resurrect The Very First Tree Nailing the leaves to the branches stabbing the branches back into the trunk and the trunk into the ground the roots back into the seed and the seed back into the Godhead who proclaims This is The Law That Makes Things Rise and Makes Things Fall Head Lines John
