

Coming to America

Coming to America: The Challenges Foreigners Encounter Aaron Fernando CWP 102, M W F Professor Cockrell April 3, 2013 Coming to America: The Challenges Foreigners Encounter Living in America is a dream of almost all people in the world. Many would like to come and live here because they want to experience the American way of living. They heard about the good life that America has to offer to everyone who comes and this impression overwhelmed their hearts' desire to migrate for greener pasture.

There are many types of immigrants that come from around the world. People from Europe or predominantly white countries do not have as much of an issue as immigrants from the middle eastern countries. As citizens of the United States of America we do not fully understand their struggle because we are born into what most people dream of. In American we have far more liberty and opportunity than anywhere else in the world. In some other countries the people are suffering without the freedoms that we are used to on a daily basis.

People of the United States should welcome immigrants who are looking for a better life and are willing to work hard to achieve it. However, life can be extremely challenging for immigrants in America because they are adjusting to a different western culture and are subjected to discrimination. There are a wide variety of adjustments foreigners need to make to live in the United States. Each of these can make the immigrant feel uncomfortable and unwanted. Most immigrants say they experienced culture shocked in their first few months in United Sates.

Even my father, an immigrant from Sri Lanka, at first had a hard time adjusting to cultural differences. If an immigrant used to spend time with friends and neighbors when he was in his country, it will be a different thing for him in America. Most people in the United States are very private and too busy. They have no time to spend talking to neighbors. My father explains that when living in a small country it seemed that everyone knew each other and was connected through daily routines. Social life obviously does occur in America but it comes easy for someone who has ived here their whole life. For example if you have always shopped at the same supermarket, the atmosphere and people become familiar. If someone is new to the place, they would feel like a total stranger because neighbors won't say anything except hi or hello. No one will come and make friends with them or spend time to make them feel comfortable in their new environment. If the immigrant is used to having a close relationship with the neighborhood in their home country, it would take time for them to adjust to their new environment where they could rarely see his neighbors.

To make new friends is hard when nobody is around. It requires the immigrant to leave their comfort zone and meet new people which we all know can be a stressful task alone.
