

Dialectical Journals

A Dialectical Journal is a collection of passages from an assigned reading section. Your tone can be a bit more relaxed, e.g. blog-like; however, don't sacrifice grammar or conventions. You are an educated person, after all.

Each passage shall be explicated ("closely-read"): the specific language (e.g. diction, syntax, imagery, rhetorical devices, etc.) analyzed; connections made within the reading section; and connections made between the passage and the work as a whole. Your basic goal is to explain why: Why is each passage and the language used therein meaningful, purposeful?

I encourage you to take interpretive risks. And as always, support your inferences with thorough commentary/analysis/explanation and text evidence (concrete details).

Choose four (4) passages from throughout the reading assignment.

Also, choose a variety of topics below; don't write four entries on "personal connection." Every response you choose should delve into the deep meaning of the passage and further our understanding of the novel/play/work as a whole. (Redundant, I know, but this bears repeating.)

- Personal connection – You can relate to what's going on in that passage. Provide an anecdote with the nitty-gritty details. Also explain the parallels between your anecdote and the text.
- Strong Imagery or Sensory Details – This passage is especially vivid. The imagery suggests deeper, below-the-surface meaning. Examine word choices, their connotations, and how they help to create meaning.
- Foreshadowing – The passage makes you anticipate some future event in the story, especially if coupled with some earlier "clue." Explain why you think something is foreshadowing: don't simply say it is because it feels like it. There should always be a clear, logical explanation. Point out the earlier clues.
- Characterization – The passage gives you a fuller idea of what the character is like. You may see a side of the character that had not been fully disclosed before. Give evidence of how a character seems initially and of how your assigned reading presents additional information.
- Motifs – The passage contains some recurring element; this could be an object, idea, or action.
- Interesting use of metaphors, similes, etc. – Like strong imagery, these suggest some deeper meaning, perhaps suggesting how a part (the scene) is representative of the whole (the novel/play/short story).
- Passages that are puzzling – You're not sure what is happening in a particular scene, why characters make certain choices, or why it is worded as it is. Yet, you will attempt some sort of explanation!
- Passages that relate to past works you've read – You can make a connection to other stories, which in turn enriches your understanding of the story you are currently studying. For example, knowing Bible stories or Greek mythology often enhances our understanding of modern-day stories. Such connections add layers of meaning.
