use them when they graduate Despite this discrepancy graduates with so called practical degrees like business and engineering are much more likely to find employment and they earn higher salaries Why do we belittle a liberal arts education despite the valuable skills that students acquire during their studies Major Trade Offs addresses this question by following students from different majors as they enter the workforce To understand the relationship between majors and entry level jobs Moss Pech conducted nearly 200 interviews with roughly ninety students from four majors at a large Midwestern university engineering business English and communications He follows these students through their senior years chronicling their internships and the support their universities provide in helping them pursue their career paths He found that graduates from practical majors entered the labor market successfully typically through structured internship programs However many ended up in entry level jobs that while well paid were largely clerical and didn t necessarily require a degree to perform On the other hand liberal arts majors rarely accessed structured internships and were largely left to carve out their own paths but did use their degree skills once they secured a job These results challenge popular myths about the marketability of these different majors and offer a new vision for the future of higher education Liberal arts skills are essential in the labor market and yet educators and policymakers still push resources into the practical arts perpetuating the myth that those majors are more valuable while depriving students of a well rounded education and leaving them no better prepared for the workforce than liberal arts students Of interest to students educators and employers Major Trade Offs calls on colleges and universities to advocate for liberal arts majors leveling the playing field for students as they plan for entry level work

Jobs for Shared Prosperity Roberta Gatti,Matteo Morgandi,Rebekka Grun,Stefanie Brodmann,Juan Manuel Moreno,Daniela Marotta,Marc Schiffbauer,Elizabeth Mata Lorenzo,2013-04-25 In the aftermath of the Arab Spring when thousands of young women and men fought for the opportunity to realize their aspirations and potential the question of jobs continues to be crucial in the Middle East and North Africa region This report uses jobs as a lens to weave together the complex dynamics of employment creation skills supply and the institutional environment of labor markets Consistent with the framework of the 2013 World Development Report on jobs of which this report is the regional companion this work goes beyond the traditional links between jobs productivity and living standards to include an understanding of how jobs matter for individual dignity and expectations an aspect that was clearly central to the Arab Spring Just as important this report complements the economic perspective with an analysis of political economy equilibrium with a view to identifying mechanisms that would trigger a reform process. As such, the report has three objectives. First, it seeks to provide an in-depth characterization of the dynamics of labor markets in the Middle East and North Africa and to analyze the barriers to the creation of more and better jobs. It does so by taking a cross-sectoral approach and identifying the distortions and incentives that the many actors—firms, governments, workers, students, education and training systems—currently face and which ultimately determine the equilibrium in labor markets. Second, the report proposes a medium-term roadmap of policy options that could promote the robust and inclusive growth needed to tackle the structural employment challenge for the region. Third, the report aims to inform and open up a platform for debate on jobs among a broad set of stakeholders with the ultimate goal of contributing to reach a shared view of the employment challenges and the reform path ahead.
