Beyoncé, Black Pride and Super Bowl 50

African Americans in the United States have experienced a long history of discrimination, racism and exclusion (Karenga, 2010). Many groups who are discriminated against in society find that speaking out against social injustice in the form of protest helps bring attention to the racial issues. The Black Lives Matter movement has found a platform in today's society to unite minority groups and other supporters to speak out about oppression of all kinds. Beyoncé is a famous African American singer and advocate for eliminating oppression and violence against people of color. Beyoncé sparked controversy throughout the country when she performed a dance routine and song that challenged oppression and police brutality at Super Bowl 50.

Lippmann, the author of "The World Outside and the Pictures in our Heads," believes that we create pictures in our head based on how we analyze things, which is usually different from reality. Beyoncé organized her performance to honor the death of Mario Woods, an African American man gunned down by police, to speak against police brutality. Her performance also displayed Black Panthers party outfits and berets to signify Black pride, but was viewed as controversial. Many people saw her performance and the Black Lives Matters message as being anti-white and anti-police but it was in fact to symbolize black pride and equality. This paper will show that Beyoncé was using her
