Abstract

The researchers' first aim was to identify whether the intervention was acceptable to young people in Egypt. In November 2011, they conducted focus group discussions with 10 young people (aged 18–25) who were members of the intervention. The participants were asked to discuss their views on the intervention, its acceptability, its feasibility, and its potential to be implemented. The researchers also asked them to suggest any changes to the intervention. The researchers also conducted a pilot study to assess the acceptability and feasibility of the intervention. The pilot study was conducted with 10 young people (aged 18–25) who were members of the intervention. The researchers also asked them to suggest any changes to the intervention. The researchers also conducted a pilot study to assess the acceptability and feasibility of the intervention. The pilot study was conducted with 10 young people (aged 18–25) who were members of the intervention. The researchers also asked them to suggest any changes to the intervention.
