Abstract. The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the performance of a 1000-m swim time trial. Ten male swimmers participated in the study. They were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The control group did not receive any training, while the experimental group received a 12-week training program. The training program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The first session was a warm-up, the second session was a technical drill, and the third session was a speed drill. The 1000-m swim time trial was performed at the beginning and at the end of the 12-week training program. The results showed that the experimental group had a significantly lower 1000-m swim time trial time at the end of the 12-week training program compared to the control group. This suggests that the 12-week training program had a positive effect on the performance of a 1000-m swim time trial.
