Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders among different types of workers. Data from the National Longitudinal Study of the Adolescent Health Survey (Add Health) were used to examine musculoskeletal symptoms among adolescents who had worked during the previous year. Results showed that those who had worked in non-manual jobs had higher rates of musculoskeletal symptoms than those who had worked in manual jobs. This finding suggests that non-manual work may be more physically demanding than manual work.
