

Une solution complète de téléradiologie comprend une composante technologique, une composante organisationnelle pour la mise en place, la formation, le suivi et l'évaluation permanente du programme de téléradiologie et enfin, une composante strictement médicale :

* La composante technologique

Tout projet de téléradiologie suppose la disponibilité d'outils techniques (matériels, logiciels et réseaux informatiques) assurant le transfert à distance des images médicales avec les moyens de communications complémentaires (téléphonie, visiophonie et téléconférence) permettant au radiologue distant de communiquer autant que de besoin avec les cliniciens demandeurs, avec le manipulateur technicien d'électroradiologie et éventuellement avec les patients pour analyser les demandes, établir le protocole d'examen et rendre compte de son interprétation.

Ces outils doivent comprendre en outre des solutions de sécurisation des données et des échanges (pour éviter toute perte, dégradation, falsification ou divulgation frauduleuse et garantir la notarisation et la conservation des échanges) et peuvent être fournis, installés et entretenus par la structure de téléradiologie, ou bien être acquis ou loués indépendamment auprès de sociétés tierces ou encore proposés par une plateforme régionale de téléimagerie mise en place sous l'égide de l'ARS.

* La composante organisationnelle

Un projet de téléradiologie ne vit pas durablement tout seul, sans être régulièrement animé, suivi, évalué et adapté aux évolutions des pratiques, des besoins, ou des ressources humaines et matérielles disponibles.

Un encadrement permanent, des actions de formation régulières (initiales et continues), une évaluation sont absolument indispensables et nécessitent d'être programmés, valorisés et financés dès le départ.

La participation de médecins au dispositif de suivi est indispensable, même si tous les praticiens impliqués dans le télédiagnostic ou la téléexpertise peuvent ne pas s'y impliquer, de même que tous les associés d'une structure libérale de radiologie ne s'impliquent pas nécessairement dans sa gestion, ni tous les praticiens d'un service hospitalier ; il n'est cependant pas sain qu'ils s'en désintéressent.

* La composante médicale

La téléradiologie, qui est par définition une activité radiologique, donc médicale, effectuée à distance, ne saurait s'organiser valablement sans l'implication des médecins radiologues, soit qu'ils accomplissent personnellement leur activité à distance, soit qu'ils s'organisent pour en déléguer une partie à d'autres intervenants tout en le contrôlant (déléguer n'est pas abandonner), en fonction des ressources humaines disponibles et de protocoles formalisés préalablement établis et convenus avec eux.
