Winchester .22 Caliber
Repeating Rifle, Model 66

YOUR BOY SHOULD BE TAUGHT TO SHOOT

HAS your boy's voice begun to change? Has he commenced wearing suspenders? Is his first pair of long trousers just around the corner, so to speak? Then his yearning for a gun demands your attention.

He will get hold of one sooner or later—it is his natural instinct. He needs your help now. Earn his lifelong gratitude and add to your own pleasure and self-esteem by giving him the proper start.

Naturally, you want him to become a good shot—to be trusted to handle a gun properly under all circumstances. Just as a boy should learn to swim.

He must be taught.

Any older person may act as instructor who will properly supervise his shooting and impress upon him the right principles. These can easily be obtained in printed form, with illustrations, at any hardware or sporting-goods store that sells Winchester Guns and Ammunition.

Or your boy may receive his instructions through membership in the Winchester Junior Rifle Corps, for which there is no charge. And he can shoot for the W. J. R. C. medals and diplomas—Marksman, Sharpshooter, and Expert Rifleman—regardless of where he practices or receives instructions.

Teach him yourself if possible. A boy's best shooting instructor is his father. And the companionship developed between them when they share the sport is rarely equaled in any other pastime.

If you would like to teach a few other boys to shoot along with him—a good plan, stimulating effort—your dealer will obtain a complimentary W. J. R. C. Instructor's Manual for you. It will give you the complete W. J. R. C. program, including full details concerning how to conduct the tests for the medals already mentioned, one of which is awarded any boy who makes the required score.

Go to your local hardware or sporting-goods store today and ask to be shown the Winchester .22 caliber Rifles for boys. The Model 66 repeater, one of which appears in the above illustration, is the most popular boy's rifle. But if you prefer one of the single-shot models, you can depend upon its being equally accurate. The steel in all Winchester barrels is of uniform quality and all are bored alike.

Buy the boy a .22 caliber Winchester Rifle—or an official W. J. R. C. Range Kit, containing everything needed, including ammunition. Get out on the range along with him, improve your acquaintance, and brush up your own shooting.

We invite you to write to us for any additional information or advice you may wish.
