

1. This is an Appeal to Authority type of fallacy because an expert or authority claims for something even if it is not his field. It is also misleading because public masses might agree on using camel cigarette or smoking itself because even doctors approved for it.

2. This is an example of an Ad Populum advertisement. We can observe that the company have inferred that Colgate is the number one brand approved by dentists. Consumers may assume that the case is always true because many dentists have proven it to be very effective but in reality, no comprehensive study has been conducted to assert the veracity of this statement. Subsequently, this could also be viewed as an Appeal to authority if you will look at a different perspective.
