Weighing My Choices

the cell lines represented could plausibly affect the frequency of patients in 100,000, the percentage would be adjusted accordingly, and the overall frequency, if significant, would be affected, but again this might be difficult. Also, the overall frequency is varying slightly in each country, so we do not know if the overall frequency is increasing or decreasing over time. However, the overall frequency is not a fixed value.

Discussion: Here, we also examined trends in perceived perceptions. These trends were generally positive, but some individuals either showed a more negative trend over time, or a decline in perceived perceptions. We found that the decline in perceived perceptions was related to age of the individual. Individuals 18 years of age or younger showed a decline in perceived perceptions, while those older than 18 years showed a positive trend. We found that the decline in perceived perceptions was also related to the number of years since the individual was last in the military. Individuals who were in the military for 10 years or more showed a decline in perceived perceptions, while those who were in the military for 10 years or less showed a positive trend.
