

to maintain a comfortable environment inside the house. By analyzing the heat transfer and air flow, we learn what heat transfer (and air flow) is required for the house to be a comfortable place. A thermodynamic analysis will tell us the conditions needed to maintain the temperature and relative humidity, and that analysis will tell us the size of the fan required to push the air in, the conditioner and the ducts needed to distribute the cooled air throughout the house.

Perhaps we want to focus on the air conditioner itself. Figure 1.2 is a schematic of two heat exchangers, a compressor, and a valve. A thermodynamic analysis would tell us how much refrigerant, what size a second source of cooling, a heat transfer analysis would tell us the heat transfer exchanger, the fluid dynamics analysis would tell us the ducts connecting the compressor to the fan, as well as the ducts connecting the the compressor, condenser, cooling source, and a compressor (Figure 1.3). The compressor, condenser, cooling source, and a compressor must be selected so that the refrigerant of the system is not compressed. This condenser cooling approach is to have air through the compressor into the condenser heat. A thermodynamic analysis of each stage, condenser, and compressor will tell us the amount of energy that must be rejected from the condenser, and that the temperature of the air entering the condenser will be selected a given limit. That analysis will tell us what size fan design, fan, or other cooling source is needed to maintain the temperature of a fully compressed. That analysis will tell us the fan size needed to push air through the fan and then the air out of the condenser and out of the compressor cycle.

1.2 THERMAL AND FLUID SYSTEMS ANALYSIS AND ENGINEERING

Additional disciplines, similar to those given in the previous section, can be given of large industrial systems (e.g., power plants, oil refineries, chemical processing plants) and related processes (e.g., heat treatment of metals). Heat propagation that would describe how thermodynamics, heat transfer, and fluid dynamics are all needed in many design fields. It is the integrated use of these three disciplines that is required for thermal and systems analysis of many systems.

Whether the objective is given an assignment to design a new device or modification to an existing process or to predict the performance of a device, the objective of the design process must be very clear. Subsequent, which aspect of the device, process, or system in which to focus must be well defined. A systematic approach to the design analysis is needed. Figure 1.4 shows a flow diagram of the design process. The design process typically takes three, analyzing and engineering a device from concept. We always begin with the physical system (e.g., the engine of a car). This is reality. The engineer's job is, first, to translate the physical system into a physical model and, second, to describe the physical model with a mathematical model. The actual physical system may be so complex that it is impossible to fully describe each part within process. However, we require that device as a model, a picture, or picture that we can describe and represent in depth by the system sufficiently so that it can be modeled. Once a physical model is developed, then physical laws that govern the process (e.g., a force, momentum, mass, or energy balance) are used to create the
