

These same individuals, in 1977, were reported as being in a "medium" category of risk. Although the group of "medium" individuals had a 1:10 risk of becoming ill, the risk was not as high as the risk of those in the "high" category.

There are also a number of other factors that can affect the results of the study. For example, the study was conducted in a single country, which may limit the generalizability of the findings. Additionally, the study was conducted in a specific population, which may limit the generalizability of the findings to other populations.

To get the most accurate picture from any study, it's best to survey all the same individuals in the course of the research. Unfortunately, no one has accurately done this before.

²These authors reported a 2.5% increase in the first-year collection of 1993-94, and 36 total savings for 2 years combined at the end of the study.
