

QUESTION I have a 1994 Ford Taurus with 100,000 miles. The car has been running fine, but recently the engine has been making a noise that sounds like a rattling or knocking sound. It seems to be coming from the front of the engine. What could be the cause of this noise?

ANSWER The noise you are describing is likely a result of worn or damaged engine components. The most common cause of a rattling or knocking sound from the front of the engine is a worn or damaged timing belt. The timing belt is responsible for synchronizing the rotation of the crankshaft and the camshaft. If the timing belt is worn or damaged, it can cause a rattling or knocking sound. Other possible causes include worn or damaged pistons, valves, or the timing chain. It is important to have the engine inspected by a qualified mechanic as soon as possible to determine the exact cause of the noise and to prevent further damage to the engine.
