Objectives

- 1.1. In your own words, what are three differences between gradient testing and gradient testing?

Gradient testing method: (a) The goal of the test procedure is to determine whether gradient testing is enough to determine the location of a component under conditions that are most likely to occur. Gradient testing is intended to control the component under conditions that are independent of the component's use. (b) The procedure is to determine whether gradient testing is enough to determine the location of a component under conditions that are most likely to occur. Gradient testing is intended to control the component under conditions that are independent of the component's use. (c) The procedure is to determine whether gradient testing is enough to determine the location of a component under conditions that are most likely to occur. Gradient testing is intended to control the component under conditions that are independent of the component's use.
