

PASSAGE A

Taken from Sir Arthur Conan-Doyle's "The Edge of the Unknown" (1930)

In this extract Arthur Conan-Doyle, best-known for writing the Sherlock Holmes stories, gives an account of his personal beliefs in - and experiences of - the supernatural.

One instance occurred some years ago. It was in my bedroom at Crowborough. I awakened in the night with an awareness that there was someone in the room, and that the presence was not of this world. I was lying with my back to the room, acutely awake, but utterly unable to move. It was physically impossible for me to turn my body and face this visitor. I heard measured steps across the room. I was conscious (without seeing it) that someone was bending over me, and then I heard a voice saying in a loud whisper, "Doyle, I come to tell you that I am sorry." A minute later my disability disappeared and I was able to turn but all was black darkness and perfectly still. My wife had not awakened and knew nothing of what had just passed. It was no dream, I was perfectly conscious all the time. My visitor gave no name, but I felt that it was a certain individual to whom I had tried to give comfort when he was bereaved. He rejected my offer of support and died himself shortly afterwards. It may well be that he wished to express regret.

I had a second interesting experience some years ago. There was a church in the neighbourhood which had the reputation of being haunted. The party consisted of my wife and myself, my two sons, my daughter and a friend. It was ten o'clock when we presented ourselves at the door of the church, where we were met by an elderly villager. Swinging a lantern, he led the way to the choir end where we all seated ourselves in the stalls which the ancient monks once occupied.

For two hours I had sat in the dark upon my hard seat. The lights still came and went behind the altar, but they only flickered over the top of the high expanse which faced us, and all below was very black. And then suddenly, quite suddenly, something occurred which no sceptic could explain away.

It may have been forty feet from where I sat to the altar, and midway between, or roughly twenty feet from me - there was a dull haze of light, a sort of glowing cloud, a foot or so across, and about a man's height from the ground. We had been rustling and whispering, but the sudden utter silence showed me that my companions were as tense as I was. The light glimmered down, and hardened into a definite shape—or I should say shapes—since there were two of them. They were two perfectly clear-cut figures in black and white, with a dim glow all their own. Their colouring and arrangement gave me a general idea of a priest's clothing. Whether they were facing the altar or facing each other was more than I could say, but they were not misty figures, they were solid shapes. For two or three minutes we all gazed at this amazing spectacle. Then my wife said loudly, "Friends, is there anything which we can do to help you?"

In an instant they were gone and we were peering into unbroken darkness with the lights still flickering above.
