100 Chagossians, Reunions, and the West the position, according to what is presented . . . is that it is not the British who have committed the crime. It has been more the other side, the French, who, not having things as much ready as we [the British], have, through their lack of resources, suffered the crime . . . It is in a position that is worthy of all that would be the position, but it is not the same the others, the others, from which we would want to distinguish ourselves. Indeed, since it is the British who also give us the opportunity to be able to distinguish ourselves from the others, we must not be in a position to be able to distinguish ourselves from the others.
