Enzymes and Cellular Regulation

(Illustrate the factors that regulate the activity of the enzyme catalase (catalase))

Wright

Enzymes are protein-based biological molecules that catalyze chemical reactions. They are active within specific pH ranges, and their activity is affected by temperature and substrate concentration. Enzymes function as catalysts, lowering the activation energy of a reaction, which allows reactions to proceed more rapidly. They are also sensitive to inhibitors, which can block the active site of the enzyme. The activity of an enzyme is also regulated by the presence of cofactors, which are non-protein molecules that are necessary for the enzyme to function properly.
