Background: The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of self-reported hearing impairment in a community sample of older adults. Methods: Data were obtained from the 1992 National Longitudinal Survey of Aging, a nationally representative sample of 1,480 community-dwelling older adults aged 65 and older. Results: The prevalence of self-reported hearing impairment was 16.9% in the community sample. The prevalence of self-reported hearing impairment was significantly higher among those with lower education, lower income, and those who were female. Conclusions: The prevalence of self-reported hearing impairment in a community sample of older adults is 16.9%. The prevalence of self-reported hearing impairment is significantly higher among those with lower education, lower income, and those who are female.
