

Pre-Lab 2: Rotational Equilibrium and Torque

1. Experimental Objectives

- Understand torque as a vector and apply it to static equilibrium problems
- Investigate static equilibrium conditions of rigid bodies without rotation
- Understand torque as a scalar (one-dimensional case of the 3-vector analysis)
- Develop the static equilibrium conceptually through

2. Background

Considered in the previous lab, rotational dynamics involves the vector and conditions for rotational equilibrium. This lab begins to investigate the conditions through which static equilibrium can be achieved. Static equilibrium is a case of the equilibrium with rotation as is also in the previous lab, but in this case, the body is not rotating or about to rotate. This is a more complex case, and the focus is on the conditions for static equilibrium, which are vector, rotational, and translational.

Rotational equilibrium is a condition that requires a rigid body to be in a state of static equilibrium. It is a state of equilibrium in which the body is not rotating or about to rotate. This is a more complex case, and the focus is on the conditions for static equilibrium, which are vector, rotational, and translational.

In addition, this lab involves the concept of torque, which is a vector quantity that is defined by a vector product of the position vector and the force vector. This is a more complex case, and the focus is on the conditions for static equilibrium, which are vector, rotational, and translational.
