Directions:

- Contains the digestive enzymes for the cell.
- The central centre of the cell and stores DNA and genetic information required for cell division and growth.
- Provides support for the internal structures of the cell. It contains the cell's organelles.
- Produces energy necessary for the cell's survival and functioning. The energy is converted from glucose into ATP (adenosine triphosphate) which is usable energy.
- Contained within the nucleus and is responsible for making ribosomes.
- A barrier around the cell. It controls the entry and exit of various substances in the cell.
- Sorts important proteins and fats in the cell before they are delivered to their next destination.
- The smallest membrane in the cell that encloses proteins. They are often called as protein factories.
- Found in many small animal cells, they convert food into energy.
- A network of bubbles that either rough or smooth and transport proteins.
