

History of Interior Design

✓ Exclusively available on IvyPanda

Interior design is a multidimensional profession that entails the application of creative and technical skills in an interior space to create an effective environment that can accommodate a range of human activities (National Council for Interior Design Qualification, 2004).

These undertakings are not only meant to be of visual value, but are also meant to transform the space such that it can create some feeling and also reflect the culture of the occupants. An interior designer is one who carries out such activities. Interior design can include activities such as flooring, windows, doors, walls, lighting, furniture, and many other design aspects (Lees-Maffei, 2008).

Ultimately, the aim of an interior designer is largely to make an interior space that is both comfortable and has aesthetic aspects to the occupiers, whether they are residents or occasional visitors.

The process of interior design follows “a systematic and coordinated methodology, including research, analysis, and integration of knowledge into the creative process, whereby the needs and resources of the client are satisfied to produce an interior space that fulfills the project goals” (National Council for Interior Design Qualification, 2004).

History of Interior Design

Historians do not have a definite answer regarding the origin of this profession, however, ancient Egyptians are often recognized as its founders (Interior Design School, 2012). The Romans and Greeks inherited the art of interior design from the Egyptians as seen through their development of public buildings with dome-shaped roofs.

From this era of magnificence and ornamentation, there was a wild rush to austerity buoyed by frequent wars in Mediaeval Europe and the rise of the Christian church (Lees-Maffei, 2008). In the early 1200s, the now famous Gothic technique was widely used and became known for its use of open rooms and windows to capture adequate light from the sun to light up the rooms.
