

FROM THE DISCUSSION BOARD (2017-2018)

Religious Responses

Religious responses, originating in a Mexican family over in Milwaukee, narrate their journey through a complex, postcolonial project of racial hybridization, and highlight the challenges and opportunities for change. In a French colonial, postcolonial time, the first time that the word "race" is used is in the 18th century, meaning "the color of the body" (Harris, 2017). In a French colonial village, a group of people, mostly of African descent, are in a situation where they are not only being persecuted but also being treated as if they are not human. The story of a Japanese American family, a story of a family that is being treated as if they are not human, is a story of a family that is being treated as if they are not human, and a story of a family that is being treated as if they are not human. The story of a family that is being treated as if they are not human, is a story of a family that is being treated as if they are not human, and a story of a family that is being treated as if they are not human.

The author's narrative is a story of a family that is being treated as if they are not human, and a story of a family that is being treated as if they are not human.
