What is the difference between the two types of questions?

There are two basic question types:

• Open-ended questions: These are questions that require the student to provide their own answer. They can be used to assess higher-order thinking skills such as analysis, synthesis, and evaluation.

• Closed-ended questions: These are questions that have a single correct answer or a limited number of possible answers. They can be used to assess lower-order thinking skills such as recall and comprehension.

• True/false questions: These are questions that require the student to either agree or disagree with a statement. They can be used to assess recall and comprehension.

• Multiple-choice questions: These are questions that require the student to choose from a list of options. They can be used to assess recall, comprehension, and application.

How can I use these questions in my teaching?

• Open-ended questions: These can be used to encourage critical thinking and problem-solving skills. Encourage students to explain their reasoning and justify their answers.

• Closed-ended questions: These can be used to check for understanding and recall. They can also be used to assess lower-order thinking skills such as recall and comprehension.

• True/false questions: These can be used to quickly assess basic knowledge.

• Multiple-choice questions: These can be used to quickly assess basic knowledge and recall. They can also be used to assess lower-order thinking skills such as recall and comprehension.

What are some tips for creating effective questions?

• Be clear and concise: Make sure your questions are easy to understand and free from ambiguity.

• Use specific language: Use language that is appropriate for the level of the student. Avoid jargon and technical terms unless they are relevant to the topic.

• Avoid leading questions: Avoid questions that suggest a particular answer or lead the student towards a specific response.

• Provide context: Provide context for the question to help the student understand what is being asked.

• Encourage critical thinking: Encourage students to think beyond the surface level and consider multiple perspectives.

• Use a variety of question types: Use a variety of question types to keep the student engaged and interested.

• Provide feedback: Provide feedback to the student to help them improve and learn from their mistakes.
