

class household, and had, until a few years ago, been very accustomed to that lifestyle. This again proved to be an interesting case for the researchers, as when they traced her development, they found various links in between her development and the theories of both Bandura and Bronfenbrenner. Both these subjects provided to be very interesting cases, because despite their ordinary and normal lives, they both displayed several interesting connections to the theories mentioned above. This provided not only a further strengthening of each of these theories, but also a practical and observable application to each theory.

One lesson that Bandura's theory teaches is that a person is highly vulnerable to the information they gather from external stimuli; especially other people (Bandura, 1977). The 21-year-old supported this assumption in many of the answers he provided. When asked about how he was planning to go about in choosing a direction in life, he quoted the example of his father. He claimed that his father had almost graduated with a degree in medicine before he realized that his passion lied with business. This was both a mistake and a learning experience for his father, but the youth seemed equally affected by this incident. He claimed that "making decisions with your mind instead of with your heart will only get you so far, which is why I choose to major in liberal arts in college, to keep my options open and exploratory till my graduation." This confirms Bandura's theory about how the information acquired through social cognitive processes has a great bearing on the learning process of the individual (Parks, 2000).

Another interesting response that this youth gave was when asked about whether he was content with his current health situation. He stated that the he had a mild case of high blood pressure, and that his health was especially vulnerable to stress. This came as a surprise for the researcher, who knew from experience that people are less susceptible to these health problems
