There is also thought to be a causal link between smoking and cancer susceptibility. An epidemiological study of lung cancer incidence in women showed that cigarette use was associated with an increase in the risk of developing the disease. This risk was higher in women who smoked more cigarettes per day and for a longer duration. The risk of developing the disease was also higher in women who had a family history of lung cancer. These findings suggest that smoking is a major risk factor for lung cancer and that genetic factors may also play a role in the development of the disease.

While the willingness of "net" will reflect several factors, its main strength lies in its ability to provide access to information, knowledge, and resources. However, it is not without its challenges. For instance, the digital divide remains a significant barrier, with many individuals lacking the necessary skills or resources to fully engage with the "net".
