

Worksheet 10 Answer Keys: Finding Order in Biodiversity

Place the information below in boxes that correspond to the sections (20)

1. Linnaean taxonomy is hierarchical, includes a series of increasingly specific steps, or categories, composed of hierarchical prefixes (kingdom, phylum, class, order, family, genus, species) ending in suffixes (family, order, class, phylum, kingdom, etc.).
2. The domain is the most general taxon, subdividing the greatest number of species. The next category is phylum, and then class, order, and family. The species is the most specific name and refers to a group of similar organisms that can interbreed and produce fertile offspring.
3. The genus includes all species and includes species names given by Linnaeus, which have, and have been, all of the same suffixes (genus, order, class, phylum, kingdom, etc.). Each species is assigned a prefix or different suffix, and their physical characteristics slightly differ from one another.
4. A kingdom includes several phyla, and phyla are also named after Linnaeus. For example, the phylum Arthropoda includes a number of different insects, and vertebrates, all of the members are members of the same kingdom (animalia) or kingdom (animalia).
5. Linnaeus's knowledge was limited, and he realized that a single kingdom did not sufficiently categorize the differences among organisms. He realized that more kingdoms (plantae and animalia) were needed. Eventually, scientists subdivided the differences between the kingdoms into great enough groups (phyla) that they could be named.
6. The three domains are defined by differences in many different parts of the cell, such as the nucleus, mitochondria, and chloroplasts. The scientists agreed that finding the three domains would give us a better understanding of life on Earth.
