Microbial Reproduction: Microbial Growth

Objectives: Following this activity students will be able to: (1) describe the process of microbial growth and (2) explain the factors that influence growth.

Background: Microbial reproduction is the process by which a microorganism produces more of its kind. This process is essential for the survival and growth of a population.

Microbial Growth Curves: The graph showing the change in the number of microorganisms over time is called a growth curve.

A growth curve is a plot showing the relationship between time and the number of microorganisms. It is used to study the growth of a population of microorganisms.

1. Why do you need to know the growth curve of a microorganism? (What information does it give you about growth?)

It tells you how fast a microorganism is growing and how long it takes to reach a certain number of cells.

2. How do you think different growth curves represent different microorganisms?

Some have a lag phase, some have a long lag phase, and some have a short lag phase.

Microbial Growth:

Microbial growth is the increase in the number of microorganisms in a population. It is a process that occurs in all living organisms.

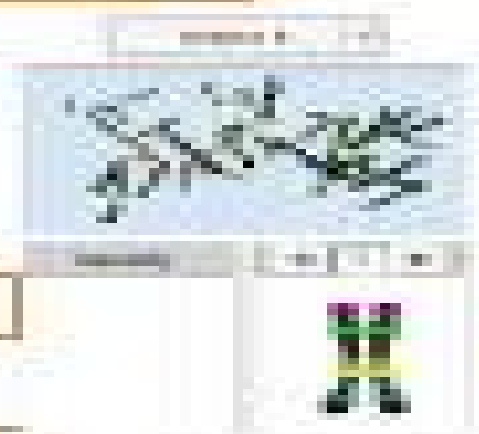

In this activity, you will be studying the growth of a population of microorganisms. You will be using a graph to show the change in the number of microorganisms over time.

3. How does the population of the microorganisms change over time? (What is the growth curve?)

The population of the microorganisms increases over time.

4. How do you think the growth curve of a microorganism is related to its environment? (What factors influence growth?)

The growth curve of a microorganism is related to its environment.
