Further genetic studies of some, nonrecombining selfing sites, and their association with recombining sites on the same chromosome suggest different evolutionary histories for the same sites on different chromosomes. Such a pattern of inheritance of different sites on the same chromosome is not uncommon in outcrossing plants. These results and some others indicate that the selfing sites may constitute a nonrandom set of those sites on longer recombining tracts that are more or less neutral or under positive directional selection processes. Together, these results suggest that selection on the selfing sites is frequent.

Human sperm cells, on the other hand, are not self-propagating. The male gametes will remain inactive in the female's vagina until they are fertilized. The sperm cells will remain inactive until they are fertilized by the egg cell. The sperm cells will remain inactive until they are fertilized by the egg cell.
