Napoleon may be divided into two classes those by marshals and officers of which Suchet's is a good example chiefly devoted to military movements and those by persons employed in the administration and in the Court giving us not only materials for history but also valuable details of the personal and inner life of the great Emperor and of his immediate surroundings Of this latter class the Memoirs of Bourrienne are among the most important Long the intimate and personal friend of Napoleon both at school and from the end of the Italian campaigns in 1797 till 1802 working in the same room with him using the same purse the confidant of most of his schemes and as his secretary having the largest part of all the official and private correspondence of the time passed through his hands Bourrienne occupied an invaluable position for storing and recording materials for history The Memoirs of his successor Meneval are more those of an esteemed private secretary yet valuable and interesting as they are they want the peculiarity of position which marks those of Bourrienne who was a compound of secretary minister and friend The accounts of such men as Miot de Melito Raederer etc are most valuable but these writers were not in that close contact with Napoleon enjoyed by Bourrienne Bourrienne's position was simply unique and we can only regret that he did not occupy it till the end of the Empire Thus it is natural that his Memoirs should have been largely used by historians and to properly understand the history of the time they must be read by all students They are indeed full of interest for every one But they also require to be read with great caution When we meet with praise of Napoleon we may generally believe it for as Thiers Consulat ii 279 says Bourrienne need be little suspected on this side for although he owed everything to Napoleon he has not seemed to remember it But very often in passages in which blame is thrown on Napoleon Bourrienne speaks partly with much of the natural bitterness of a former and discarded friend and partly with the curious mixed feeling which even the brothers of Napoleon display in their Memoirs pride in the wonderful abilities evinced by the man with whom he was allied and jealousy at the way in which he was outshone by the man he had in youth regarded as inferior to himself Sometimes also we may even suspect the praise Thus when Bourrienne defends Napoleon for giving as he alleges poison to the sick at Jaffa a doubt arises whether his object was to really defend what to most Englishmen of this day with remembrances of the deeds and resolutions of the Indian Mutiny will seem an act to be pardoned if not approved or whether he was more anxious to fix the committal of the act on Napoleon at a time when public opinion loudly blamed it The same may be said of his defence of the massacre of the prisoners of Jaffa
