

2 To remove the plugs, first mark the #11 bolts to ensure correct reinsertion. Then pull them off the plugs. After removing the bolts, cut the terminal insulator at the end of the bolt — not the seal head.

3 Using a spark plug wrench in close contact and extension bar, unscrew the plugs and remove them from the engine (see Illustration).

4 The condition of the spark plugs will also tell much about the condition of the engine.

5 If the insulator nose of the spark plug is clean and white, with no deposits, this is indicative of a good engine. If the tip is black, it is not plug material that came from the electrode assembly — a bad plug material is very common.

6 If the top and insulator nose are covered with black heavy sooting deposits, then this is indicative that the mixture is too rich. Should the plug be black and dry, then it is likely that the engine is very worn, as well as the mixture being too rich.

7 If the insulator nose is covered with light-colored deposits, then the mixture is correct and it is likely that the engine is in good condition.

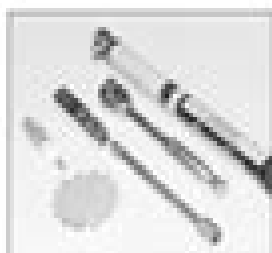

8 The spark plug gap is of considerable importance, as if it is too large or too small, the size of the spark and its efficiency will be seriously impaired. The spark plug gap should be set to the figure given in the Specifications at the beginning of this Chapter.

15.15a Measuring the spark plug gap with a wire gauge.

15.15b ... and adjusting the gap using a screw adjusting tool.

15.15c Tools required for spark plug removal, gap adjustment and refitting.

9 To set it, measure the gap with a feeler blade, and then bend open or close the outer ring accordingly until the correct gap is achieved (see Illustration). The centre electrode should never be bent as this may crack the insulator and cause plug failure. If refitting error.

10 Before each plug electrode can refitting bolts are inserted from each side to secure them (see Illustration).

11 Before fitting the plug the ensure that the plug threads and the seating area in the cylinder head are clean. Do not use oil or grease.

12 Before the plugs in the third cylinder are first fully tightened in the specified torque, if a special wrench is not available, tighten the plug with your resistance is felt. Then tighten to a further half a turn for the top two plug holes in first engine, or 1/2 of a turn for the second and two third Cyl. engines. Do not over-tighten the spark plugs, otherwise damage to the threads may occur and they will not be extremely difficult to remove in the future.

HINT It is very often difficult to insert spark plugs into their holes without cross-threading them. To avoid this possibility, fit a short length of 1/8-inch diameter aluminium rod over the end of the spark plug. The flexible hose acts as a universal joint to help align the plug with the plug hole. Should the plug begin to cross-thread the hole with the plug hole, preventing thread damage to the aluminium cylinder head.

15.16 Measuring the spark plug gap with a feeler blade.

13 Pull the plug leads in the correct order ensuring that they are secure to push the plug wires. Periodically wipe the wires clean to remove the risk of HT damage by using one remove any traces of corrosion that may occur on the end fittings.

14 Place a screw between the padplates and the caliper and check the thickness of the brake material of the disc pads (see Illustration). If the material has worn down to the specified minimum or less, the pads must be renewed as an axle set flow only.

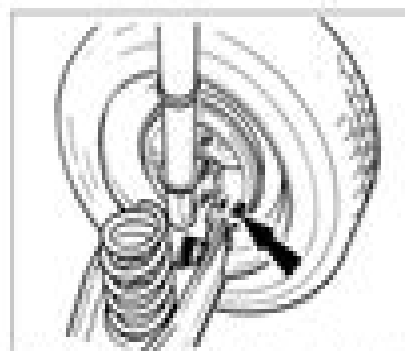

15 For a comprehensive check, the brake pads should be removed and cleaned. The oil should be applied to the caliper to be checked, and the condition of the brake disc must be inspected on both sides. Refer to Chapter 8 for further information.

16 Due to the fact that the rear brake shoes are combined with the hubs, which rotate around the brake disc, inspection from the rear will show the brake material of the shoe linings can be looked out of the specified intervals by wiping out the wheel inspection plug from the lower backplate and observing the linings through the hole using a mirror (see Illustration).

17 If excessive thickness of friction material must always be observed on the shoes. If it is worn down to this point, renew the shoes.

18 The left shoe is to be checked against the right shoe using a mirror (see Illustration).

19 Remove the wheel or use an oil floor stand, and if only one is used in the workshop.

Front suspension and steering check

1 Raise the front of the vehicle, and securely support it at one chassis bar ("Jacking one vehicle safely").

2 Visually inspect the balljoint dust covers and the steering rack and worm gears for leaks, chafing or deterioration (see Illustration). The wear of these components will create noise of vibration, together with oil and water leaks, resulting in rapid deterioration of the bearings or steering gear.

3 Check the condition of the 12 screws and 12 lock washers, and fit the lock (see Illustration). This right-hand side may be left, but if the front wheel is adjustable, further inspection is necessary to determine the source. Continue moving the wheel until a maximum depression of the frame is reached. If the movement is not eliminated or significantly reduced, it is likely that the ball bearings are at fault. If the ball joint is still correct and the frame is depressed, then there is wear in the suspension arms or bushings.

4 Move across the wheel to the front and 12 o'clock position, and fit the lock (see Illustration). The movement felt now that again be moved to rear in the ball bearings in the steering dampers or dampers. If the wear or noise is reduced to zero, the wheel movement will be correct.

5 Using a large screwdriver in the bar, check for wear in the suspension mounting bushes by moving between the various suspension components and its attachment points. Some movement is to be expected as the mountings are made of rubber, but excessive wear should be obvious. Also check the condition of any rubber rubber bushes, looking for leaks, cracks or deterioration of the rubber.

6 Strike the car lightly on its wheels, then proceed from the steering wheel back and forth about at right angles of a four-wheel test. There should be very little, if any, left movement between the steering wheel and roadwheels. If this is not the case, check the joints and mountings previously checked, but in addition, check the power steering control units for wear, and the belt and power steering gear itself.

7 Visually check that both wheels are turned in properly steered in the top corner, ensuring that the front foot plate is fully engaged in the groove in the support plate.

Suspension strut/shock absorber check

1 Check for any signs of fluid leakage around the suspension strut/shock absorber body, or that the rubber parts around the piston rod.

2 Visually check the both wheels are turned in properly steered in the top corner, ensuring that the front foot plate is fully engaged in the groove in the support plate.

3 Check the tightness of the piston bolts and if they are not disconnected, then you can check the proper operation of fitting of bushings, bearings and other parts in motion.

4 Check for any signs of fluid leakage around the suspension strut/shock absorber body, or that the rubber parts around the piston rod.

15.20 Checking a steering gear joint.

5 Check for any signs of fluid leakage around the suspension strut/shock absorber body, or that the rubber parts around the piston rod.

6 The effects of the suspension dampers should be checked by looking at the vehicle at each corner. Generally speaking, the body will return to its normal position and stop after being depressed. If it rises and returns as a rebound, the suspension strut/shock absorber is probably suspect. Examine also the suspension strut/shock absorber upper and lower mountings for any signs of wear.

7 Visually check the both wheels are turned in properly steered in the top corner, ensuring that the front foot plate is fully engaged in the groove in the support plate.

16 Fuel tank check

1 Periodically check the both for leakage or other damage. If correct, leave the fuel.

2 If the fuel tank is dry, wipe them with a clean cloth using a fine detergent soap.

3 Check the tightness of the piston bolts and if they are not disconnected, then you can check the proper operation of fitting of bushings, bearings and other parts in motion.

4 Check for any signs of fluid leakage around the suspension strut/shock absorber body, or that the rubber parts around the piston rod.

15.21 Checking the fuel tank for leaks.
