It is possible that the authors' definition of the term "cognitive" is too broad. The authors state that "cognitive" refers to "any mental process that is involved in the acquisition, storage, and use of knowledge." This definition is very broad and includes many processes that are not typically considered cognitive. For example, the authors include "emotional processes" and "social processes" as cognitive processes. This is a departure from the traditional definition of cognitive processes, which typically refers to processes such as perception, memory, and reasoning.

Figure 1 shows a simple L-shaped structure. The structure is composed of two rectangular blocks. The first block is a rectangular prism with a length of 10 units, a width of 5 units, and a height of 5 units. The second block is a rectangular prism with a length of 5 units, a width of 5 units, and a height of 5 units. The second block is attached to the top surface of the first block, such that its front edge is aligned with the front edge of the first block, and its right edge is aligned with the right edge of the first block. The overall dimensions of the structure are 15 units in length, 5 units in width, and 10 units in height.

1. Identify a research problem or question that you are studying. (What is the problem or question under study?)
2. Formulate a hypothesis (a statement that predicts the outcome of the study).
3. Design the study (What data are you going to collect? How are you going to collect the data? What are the independent and dependent variables? What are the control and experimental groups? What are the procedures? What are the statistical tests? What are the ethical considerations?)
4. Collect data (How are you going to collect the data? What are the procedures? What are the ethical considerations?)
5. Analyze the data (What statistical tests are you going to use? What are the results of the tests? What are the conclusions?)
6. Interpret the results (What do the results mean? What are the implications? What are the limitations? What are the future directions?)

Steps in the research process: 1. Identify a research problem or question that you are studying. How are you going to collect the data? What are the independent and dependent variables? What are the control and experimental groups? What are the procedures? What are the statistical tests? What are the ethical considerations?) 4. Collect data (How are you going to collect the data? What are the procedures? What are the conclusions?) 6. Interpret the results (What do the results mean? What are the implications? What are the limitations? What are the future directions?)

These data show that the overall impact of the 1997-1998 El Niño was a significant increase in the number of people who were malnourished in the region. The increase was particularly large in the countries of the Andean region, where the number of malnourished people increased by 1.5 million. This increase was due to a combination of factors, including the impact of the El Niño on food production and distribution, and the impact of the El Niño on the economy and social services.
