PARTICLE THEORY AND STATES OF MATTER

Particle theory explains the properties of matter. It tells us how particles are arranged in solids, liquids, and gases. It also tells us how particles move and how they interact with each other. The arrangement of particles in a substance determines its state of matter. Solids have a fixed shape and volume. Liquids have a fixed volume but no fixed shape. Gases have no fixed shape or volume.

Solids: Particles are packed closely together in a regular arrangement. They vibrate in fixed positions. Solids have a fixed shape and volume. Liquids: Particles are packed closely together but can move past each other. Liquids have a fixed volume but no fixed shape. Gases: Particles are far apart and move rapidly in all directions. Gases have no fixed shape or volume.

Changes of State: When a substance changes from one state to another, it undergoes a change of state. This happens when the particles gain or lose energy. For example, when a solid melts, the particles gain enough energy to break the strong forces holding them in place. When a liquid boils, the particles gain enough energy to escape the liquid and become a gas.

Intermolecular Forces: Particles are held together by forces called intermolecular forces. These forces are strongest in solids and weakest in gases. The strength of these forces determines the state of matter. For example, water has strong intermolecular forces, which is why it is a liquid at room temperature.
