the 1990s, the industry has been hit hard by a combination of factors. The most significant of these is the decline in the number of new entrants, which has led to a concentration of power among a few large firms. This has resulted in a more homogeneous market, with less competition and a higher degree of control over prices and quality. The industry has also been affected by a number of other factors, including changes in government policy, the entry of new technologies, and the changing needs of consumers. These factors have all contributed to a decline in the industry's profitability and a loss of market share. As a result, the industry is now facing a period of significant restructuring and consolidation. This process is likely to continue for some time, as the industry seeks to adapt to the challenges of the 21st century.
