Mage's Blood David H.,2017-10-07 As the sun stabbed through a cleft in the eastern mountains a thin wail lifted from a midden The refuse heap lay downwind of a ramshackle cluster of mud brick hovels The quavering cry hung in the air an invitation to predators A lurking jackal soon appeared sniffing warily In the distance others of his kind yowled and yapped but this close to prey he moved in silence There a bundle of swaddled clothing amidst the waste and filth jerking spasmodically tiny brown limbs kicking free The jackal looked around then trotted forward cautiously The helpless newborn went still as the beast loomed over it It did not yet understand that the warm embracing being that had held it would not return It was thirsty and the cold was beginning to bite The beast did not see a child it saw food Its jaws opened An instant later the jackal was hurled through the air its hindquarters smashing against a boulder It writhed agonisingly and tried to run sliding down the slope it had so gracefully ascended its eyes flashing about seeking the danger it had never even sensed One hind leg was shattered it didn't get far A ragged bulk wrapped in cloth rose and glided towards the beast which snapped and snarled as an arm holding a rock emerged and rose and fell There was a muffled crunch and blood splattered From amidst the filthy cloth a face emerged a leathery faced old woman with wiry iron hair She bent until her lips were almost touching the jackal's muzzle She inhaled
