

The diagram illustrates the internal mechanism of a pneumatic PID controller. It features a main body with various internal components and external connections. The air supply enters from the bottom left, passes through a shutoff valve and a regulator, and then splits into three parallel paths: one through a derivative restrictor, one through a reset restrictor, and one through a control relay. These paths lead to the reset bellows, the proportioning bellows, and the control relay, respectively. The proportioning bellows is connected to a flat spring, which in turn is connected to a proportioning lever. The reset bellows is connected to a reset lever. The control relay is connected to a balance indicator. The proportioning lever and reset lever are connected to a flapper nozzle, which is part of a flapper-striker mechanism. The flapper nozzle is connected to the output line, which leads to the control valve. The diagram also shows a process measurement input and a local or remote set point input. The output is labeled 'Output to a Control Valve'.
