Human Population in the Future Benaiah Mayabi, 2018-03-09 Polemic Paper from the year 2017 in the subject Environmental Sciences language English abstract

Currently there is more human population than the available natural resources to sustain such rising numbers of people The highest rates of population increase are in the developing countries which are also characterized by poverty among other social problems It follows therefore that these countries need to move with speed to tame and regulate the surging populations because failure to do so may mean less or no survival in the few coming years Third world countries need to come up with policies to regulate population as this would be the only way out of the problem we could be heading into because of large populations and less resources to sustain such populations It is evident that while world populations keep on increasing the natural resources we depend on keep on reducing which means that there is too much pressure on the environment to provide what it cannot Biodiversity is now threatened and so is the human population because humans depend almost entirely on the environment
