Paleoanthropology and Archaeology of Big-Game Hunting John D. Speth, 2010-09-08 Since its inception, paleoanthropology has been closely wedded to the idea that big game hunting by our hominin ancestors arose first and foremost as a means for acquiring energy and vital nutrients. This assumption has rarely been questioned and seems intuitively obvious: meat is a nutrient-rich food with the ideal array of amino acids, and big animals provide meat in large convenient packages. Through new research, the author of this volume provides a strong argument that the primary goals of big game hunting were actually social and political: increasing hunter's prestige and standing and that the nutritional component was just an added bonus. Through a comprehensive interdisciplinary research approach, the author examines the historical and current perceptions of protein as an important nutrient source, the biological impact of a high protein diet, and the evidence of this in the archaeological record, and provides a compelling reexamination of this long-held conclusion. This volume will be of interest to researchers in Archaeology, Evolutionary Biology, and Paleoanthropology, particularly those studying diet and nutrition. Pediatric Gastrointestinal Disease W.
