Endocrine System and Associated Organs

Background

The endocrine system has specialized organs called glands, hormones and receptors. Together, they coordinate and control body functions through chemical messengers and feedback mechanisms in response to constantly changing conditions and needs.

Generally, all endocrine glands release hormones, whereas other cells produce hormones and coordinate the processes within the body.

1. The hypothalamus, which is the control point in the brain, directs all chemical signals passing through the nervous system to produce signals to release.
2. The endocrine system, which is a network of specialized cells that release hormones into the bloodstream, affects processes such as the development of the reproductive system, growth and metabolism of the entire body.

The endocrine system works in tandem with the nervous system to control all body functions and processes.

Four principal feedback loops control the system: two negative and two positive. (Explain how the nature of these processes affects the body.)
