

Boarding Schools Are Better Than Day Schools

Boarding school leads to a better learning environment for the students, but day school can also be competent enough to provide a good learning environment. Both types of schools play great importance and have its own advantage. There are a number of benefits of boarding school such as attention to students, facilities and academic qualities. With this, I strongly say 'boarding schools are better than day schools'.

Boarding school allows teachers to concentrate on their students. This is because boarding school has a low student-teacher ratio. Due to this, students are able to converge among themselves and with their teachers. Teachers would be able to give attention and focus to students individually in order to develop their individual potential holistically. On the contrary, the day school consists of large class sizes and huge amount of students in each class. Thus, the teacher could only focus on a whole class teaching rather than individual teaching.

The facilities and academic qualities of a boarding school deemed to beat the day school. The amenities provided in a boarding school are more advanced compared to the day school. For instance, facilities such as the library, theater facilities, or athletic complexes are beyond the basic facilities which are available in an ordinary school. Furthermore, the academic quality level of a boarding school is higher than an ordinary school since the academic studies in the boarding school are merged with other activities, such as sports and arts. Therefore, the academic level of boarding school is increased wholly for the reason of integrated activities.
