How To Find Your Part Number

- 1 Refer to the Corporate Expected Value table in the Corporate Risk section of page 2 of the AEP. A company value is the expected return on investment for a company's common stock and is determined by the company's expected future cash flows, discounted back to the present. Expected future cash flows are determined by the company's expected future sales, expected future operating costs, and expected future taxes.
- 2 Corporate risk is the business risk of a company, which is measured by the standard deviation of the company's expected future cash flows. Corporate risk is the risk that the company's cash flows will be lower than expected, resulting in a lower company value. Corporate risk is measured by the standard deviation of the company's expected future cash flows.
- 3 Refer to the table for Risk-Adjusted Expected Value in the Corporate Risk section of page 2 of the AEP. The risk-adjusted expected value is the expected return on investment for a company's common stock, adjusted for the company's corporate risk. The risk-adjusted expected value is determined by the company's expected future cash flows, discounted back to the present, and then adjusted for the company's corporate risk.
