10. Aspergillus fumigatus and A. nidulans are two of the most common fungi that cause allergic reactions in humans. A. fumigatus is a common indoor mold, while A. nidulans is a common outdoor mold. Both fungi are known to cause allergic reactions in humans, particularly in the respiratory system. The allergens produced by these fungi are complex molecules that can trigger an immune response in susceptible individuals. The allergens are often found in the spores of the fungi, which are inhaled and enter the respiratory system. The immune system then reacts to these allergens, leading to the development of allergic reactions. These reactions can range from mild, such as sneezing and runny nose, to severe, such as asthma and allergic rhinitis. The severity of the reaction depends on the individual's sensitivity to the allergens and the amount of exposure. In some cases, exposure to these fungi can lead to chronic allergic diseases. Therefore, it is important to be aware of the presence of these fungi in the environment and to take steps to avoid exposure, such as using air filters and avoiding areas with high humidity.

Figure 10 shows the difference in the atmospheric CO₂ concentration between the two scenarios. The difference is small, but it is positive, indicating that the scenario with the higher CO₂ concentration is more favorable for the environment.
